The freedom of American speech and manners has evidently overwhelmed him; while the public capacity for swallowing the most egregious yarns must have convinced him of the importance of keeping his own counsel. He is said to be a man but little posted in the ways of this wicked world, having spent his life among books and the consideration of spiritual things. It was not surprising, therefore, that he should have fallen into the snares of the reportorial fowlers; but when the tolls tightened about him, and he experienced the mortification of having his opinions and observations dished up in a dozen different styles, and reportorial imagination, his patience gave out and, he wisely resolved to 'cork up.'

The President's Letter to Dent. WASHINGTON, October 28, 1869. Walmiardow, Ostober 23, 1899.
The following is the letter of the President addressed to Judge Dent last summer, while the latter was moving to secure the Conservative nomination for Governor of Mississippi: Long Branch, August 1, 1869.

DEAR JUDGE: I am so thoroughly attailed in my own mind that the succases of the so-called Conservative Re-publican party in Mississippi waller result in the defeat of what I believe to be for the best interests of the State result in the defeat of what I believe to be for the best interests of the State and country, that I have determined to any so to you in writing. Of course I know or believe that your intentions are good in accepting the nomination of the Conservative party. I would regret to see you run for an office and the defeated by my sot, but as matters now look, I must throw the weight of my influence in favor of the party of now look, I must throw the weight of my influence in favor of the party opposed to "you. I enruestly hope that before election there will be such one cessions on either side in Mississippi as to unite all true supporters in the State reconstruction, and of the administration together in support of one ticket. [Here follows a paragraph of a private nature, and the letter then concludes as follows:]

may not be under any wrong impression as to what I regard, or may here after regard as public duty. Personally I wish you well, and would do all in personal feelings will not influence me.
'With kindest regards, yours truly,

THE SECOND EMPIRE Louis Napoleon Interviewed-His Hopes for His Recovery.

The Journal Paris, in its political col-The Journal Paris, in its political column, reproduces the terms of a conversation which, it says, took place in 1867, at the time of the exhibition, between the Emperor of France and Mr. R—, the head of a United States family with whom Louis Napoleon has remained ever since his residence in America on terms of affectionate intimacy. 'It was,' says that journal, 'shortly after the illness of the Prince Imperial. Fears had been entertained Imperial. Fearshad been entertained that his life was in danger, and the Emperor, who adores his son, was still haunted by the phantoms of the child's maisdy. If I had had the misfortune," said His Majesty, 'to lose him, and if I had been convinced of the impossibility of having another direct heir, I should certainly have put into execution an extraordinary project, I should have given France the privitiges, liberties and institutions of a Republic; I should have decided to become the first citizen of my country. Fearshad been entertained come the first citizen of my country, after having restored to it all that the necessities of policy have compelled me to deprive it of for a time; in a word, I should have rendered impossible, after ime, any other form of government than the republican, the only one which, wisely understood and applied by an energetle Power, suits the temperament of the French people. But the dream must be renounced, as a father has no right to destroy his ann's prospects. I shall endeavor to find the means of reconciling two principles which seem incompatible—the Empire and Liberty, my heirs wills reign, and France will only loss a distinctive soithet, the name my heirs wills reign, and France v only lose a distinctive epithet, the na of a Republic."

Mr. Boutwell's appeal for paying the debt will earn him glory and patriotism. The obligation cannot be put too simply and nakedly. It is a duty which America owes primarily to the creditor. The nation does not want any other reason but the creditors' right pointed out to them. The security of the American public faith is excellent but their liability to after the terms of the contract against the will of the but their liability to after the terms of the contract against the will of the creditors, would render their but scanty security bad. The only sound rule to give capital courage, to permeate the Union, is that a bargain is a bargain, and that it is a sufficient reason why one party is bound to keep it, that the other party to it thus made his arrangements on the faith of its being kept.
